GCC Bonds and Sukuk Market – Market performance H1 2025

Global fixed income indices had a positive first half of the year given falling interest rates, political tensions, and currency fluctuations during the year. In contrast to their strong start in Q1, GCC Fixed Income Indices have lagged their peers in the second quarter, mainly due to the rising tensions in the region. Yet, all indices have posted positive returns for the year, including the GCC indices given that yields have slowly been declining over the year.

Source: S&P MENA Bond and Sukuk Index, Bloomberg, Markaz Analysis

During the first half of the year, all indices have performed positively. However, there was a significant difference between the returns of emerging market indices and global/developed indices. Given the fall in the US dollar this year, the Bloomberg Multiverse and the Bloomberg Global Agg have greatly underperformed the other indices. However, the S&P US Treasury Bond index has performed relatively well when compared to other indices, with the index benefitting from the “flight-to-quality” that the markets have been experiencing. The FTSE World Government Bond Index has been the best performer during the year, given its exposure to different sovereign bond markets. The index has benefited from global central bank decisions to lower interest rates during the first half, highlighted by the strong outperformance vs the S&P US Treasury Bond Index (given that the FED has not yet lowered interest rates).

Credit Default Swaps (CDS)

During the first half of 2025, CDS spreads for GCC countries experienced mixed performances. Qatar (-15%), Abu Dhabi (-14%), and Kuwait (-11%) have all experienced a tightening in their CDS spreads, especially during the second quarter of the year. On the other hand, all other GCC countries have experienced a widening in their CDS spreads, lead by Bahrain (+16%) and Saudi Arabia (+10%). Oman (+7%) also experienced a spread widening, while Dubai's CDS spreads have experienced the smallest widening (+1%).

The Emirate of Abu Dhabi and Qatar continue to maintain the highest sovereign credit ratings among peers in the GCC region, followed by Kuwait and then Saudi Arabia. Bahrain continues to have the lowest credit ratings in the GCC.
